Plan for 1982 crop now

Next year's cropping program really begins this fall with early fertilization and liming of our fields.

Fall fertilization and liming offers several advantages, said Stephen J. Donohue, Virginia Tech Extension agronomist. First, it allows more time for lime to react with the soil before next year's crop is planted.

Second, it helps reduce soil compaction since fields are dryer and support heavy spreader trucks better. Third, it generally permits more time to do a better job of applying fertilizer and lime materials.

To do the job right, soil samples should be pulled from the field for proper calculation of fertilizer and lime rates to apply. Sampling procedures must be followed closely to make sure laboratory results and recommendations are reliable.

This means dividing fields that are to be sampled into uniform areas--areas that are similar in both soil type and color, that were planted to the same crop last year, that received similar fertilizer and lime treatment, and had similar crop growth. Each sample should represent an area not larger than 10 acres in size.

At least two subsamples or cores should be collected per acre from the uniform area being sampled. These subsamples should then be mixed in a plastic pail and a representative composite sample taken from the pail for mailing to the lab, said the College of Agriculture and Life Sciences faculty member. In regard to sampling depth, cultivated fields should be sampled to the depth of plowing whereas pasture, semi-permanent hay and no-till crop fields should be sampled to the 2-to-4-inch depth.

After collecting these samples, they can be sent directly to the Virginia Tech Soil Testing and Plant Analysis Laboratory for testing or dropped off at a local Extension office for forwarding to the lab, Donohue said.

Turnaround time is about 10 days to 2 weeks. One plus is that there are no delays in testing during this time of year.

Soil test recommendations are usually good for two to three years if the same crop is going to be planted. Lime needs to be applied only once every several years and, since it takes several years of fertilizer application to change the soil test nutrient level, the same rates of fertilizer can be used, the Extension specialist concluded.

Local girl recognized

Monica Stratton of Appomattox was cited for her poetic prowess at the recent Yorktown Bicentennial festivities at Yorktown, Va.

Monica, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Stratton of Appomattox, received rewards and recognition for a poem she wrote for Shirley Eye's sixth grade class last year at Appomattox Elementary School.

The poem, titled "Revolutionary War," was selected for inclusion in the book, America: A Revolutionary Experience, which was published by the York County public school system.

The book contains poems and other literary works by students from across the Commonwealth of Virginia. The poems were selected in a contest sponsored by the York County school system.

Monica's poem was selected to represent Appomattox County.

At a ceremonial dinner during the Yorktwon Bicentennial festivities, Monica was presented with four copies of the book, a certificate of recognition, and a Yorktown Bicentenniel Medallion by Mr. Alexander C. Brown, renowned historian.

Monica, now a seventh-grader at Appomattox Middle School, gave a copy of the book to her former teacher, Mrs. Eye, kept two copies of the book for herself and gave the fourth copy to the library at the elementary school.

Monica's poem, as it appeared in the book "America: A Revolutionary Experience," is reprinted below:

REVOLUTIONARY WAR
A raid on three British ships was a surprise.
The colonists jumped aboard in Indian disguise.
They threw the tea overboard in protest and showed the British there could be no rest.
The "Boston Tea Party" of 1773
Was the beginning of our nation's struggle to be free.
The colonists were resentful and full of emotion at the British ruling them from across the ocean.
There were so many problems, there seemed no solution.
And thus started the American Revolution.
Many people would not survive
The battle that began in 1775.
"Patriots" and "minutemen" fought for the 13 colonies.
British were called "Redcoats" their colonist supporters "Tories."
"Taxation without representation" was the patriots' cry.
As they declared independence in 1776 on the Fourth of July
From Lexington to Yorktown, through hopes and fears.
The war lasted for eight long years.
Although many died and people did mourn
The greatest nation of all was born.
